“ Hey Carol,

I never thought my last words to you would be here, and me talking to you while you're in heaven. We talked about heaven and hell. We talked about everything. You were the big sister I never had and a cherished friend. We laughed together and smiled together. You always made me feel so comfortable in your presence. I loved you then, and I still love you today and hold you dear. My heart hurt for you and Vassie and the rest of your family when Clint passed.

I still remember the day that you started talking about Vassie. You had had other boyfriends, but with Vassie you went from us kinda knowing how to sign the alphabet to sentences without needing the alphabet in two weeks. Even though I was only 13 or 14, I knew that you were in love. We spent so much time together in and around Hickory Grove Church. I was a little jealous at first, but perhaps that is the lesson God wanted me to learn, as I have never had jealousy in my life. I have a new girlfriend Carol. The first one in over ten years. I absolutely adore her. She tells me everything happens for a reason and that God knows what they are. I try to find reasons for everything now. She is a beautiful person and even though she don't appear to be jealous, I told her how it's not just relationships but nations that can be and have been destroyed by jealousy. I am thankful that you helped me to understand that way back then in 1980. Garth Brooks did a song about jealousy named Papa Loved Momma. If you never heard it, I 'll sing it to you when I get there. If you did hear it, I bet you liked it like me. I told her the song is the perfect definition of jealousy.

Carol, I am so sorry that I let you slip so far away. When you and Vassie came together. I saw two wonderful people who God brought together to build a life, and when it happen I didn't feel like my little butt needed to be around and in the way. And at that time, I think my little mind thought that was how it worked. I didn't realize that after you and Vassie became adjusted to one another, that you would again have time for someone like me. A little adopted brother.

After I realized it, I had intentions, but I didn't take action fast enough and I missed my opportunities. Please forgive.

Carol, You will forever be loved in my heart, and when I get to heaven, I intend to find you and hug your neck, and I hope that you will forgive my absence. I love you!

Paul
