“ Grandma Clara loved everyone she met. 20 years ago she invited a poor and neglected soul into her family, who her granddaughter dragged home one day. Even then, her class amidst a small town atmosphere struck me as beautiful. I don't know if she was rich, but her grace and demeanor always translated (to a young me) as being just a little bit "better" than the rest. But, she was far from a snob. She was particular, and her granddaughter was always correcting my language in her presence. Surely, she was an angel walking among us. She loved, gave, and did whatever she could for whomever she saw needed it. I loved her like she was my own...and I will never forget her last words to me. "You are our family." To her family, I love each and every one of you. I am so very sorry for your broken hearts and the gaping hole in your lives. I wish I could fix it, somehow. To Grandma Clara, I will miss you. I know you are at peace now, but I can hear the sound of hearts breaking in your absence. But angels are born with wings, so they can rise above us and watch over us. I will rest easier knowing you are there...to watch us and guide us from afar. Forgive our tears, for the emptiness is so vast without you. Rest in peace, sweet lady, for you have earned your rewards. I love you.
