“ To Patsy and the rest of Joey's family... I am so sorry for all of y'all's pain that you all have had to endure since Joey's passing. It's sad to say, but I did not know until now. (Sept. 24) All the family will be in my prayer's. I pray that the Good Lord keep's His loving arms wrapped around you, just as He has done since this painful day. I pray that He will and that He already has and will continue laying His healing hands upon each of you so that you all will have the strength, the peace, and the will to move forward a little more each day. I have the faith in God to know that Joey is pain free, feels like a 20 year old again, and now that he's in his forever home with Our Lord and Savior, he's the happiest he's ever been. With a home as beautiful as Heaven and him knowing he's spending eternity with The Father, there's no way of any kind would he ever return to his earthly home...he'll patiently wait for each of you to join him in Heaven. It is my hope, for you, the family, to truly know that Joey is okay, better than any of us really. Even though just knowing that doesn't take away the pain, I pray that it does give you all an inner peace with the Lord for taking Joey home when I know all any of you wanted or wants is for him to be here with you now and not just be left with memories. But, please hold those dear to your heart because that is what will get you through some of your worst days ahead. I know what it feels like to loose your Daddy, a loved one and those are what I turn to besides the Lord, to turn that bad day around. God bless you all and I pray He keeps each and every one of you in His loving care. And remember to watch out for your Godwinks, (a red cardinal, a fluttering butterfly, music that comes out of nowhere that suddenly reminds you of him or it could be one of his favorites and the list goes on and on of these. But, they do truly help the heartache, gives you comfort, and gives you a little peace knowing that he will be around checking in on ya, but also letting you know he'll still always be there with you.)

Godspeed,

Susan Todd

“ Dearest Patsy, we mourn with you at the passing of Joey. Dean looked forward to spending time at the river house. I heard all the tall tales when he got back home about fishing, riding on the river and sitting around the fire sharing tall tales. He told me over and over how great you were taking care of the group. Joey will be missed by the Ganis clan. We have been praying for both of you since his illness. Sharon & Dean.

“ I met Joey for the first time on Friday night 6-15-18. He was struggling for his life at that point. i knew Joey through the eyes of his daughter Brandy and grand child Hensley. It was very obvious that he loved his family and grand children very much. He was a kind gentle person that loved people and would help all that he could. He was a dedicated family man that loved his wife. All he seemed to need was to know Christ as his Savior and thank the Lord he accepted him as his Savior. While it will be hard without him, we have joy in knowing that we can see him again.

“Joey was a wonderful neighbor, friend, cousin, and he watched out for our neighborhood. He fought a long battle of sickness and now he has a new body and is with Jesus. Prayers for the family for strength and comfort in this time of sadness. God Bless.”
